Record Internet Radio with Snowtape

By Sonny on March 11, 2010

Radio is dead, it's now all about Internet radio. Sites like Pandora, Slacker Radio, and others, allow users to access a wide variety of online radio. Internet radio offers thousands of stations, which can be listened to worldwide, rather than only within a certain range. What if you want to record some of the music your listening to. Well you could setup Audio Hijack Pro and grab the audio manually. Now you can easily record it with Snowtape. Snowtape plays a wide variety of Internet radio stations, and supports adding more from supported URLs. Snowtape will also record the internet radio, with no need to select Audio channels, just click and it will record.

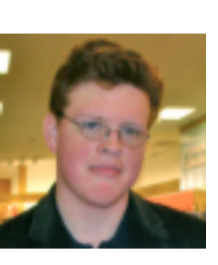

Snowtape's interface is beautiful to use and easy to navigate. Easily grabs tags of the music playing and get links to buy it in iTunes. Record songs and they will include a tag of what the song they was playing. Export recorded songs to iTunes for easy syncing with an iPod. Share radio stations in Emails, Twitter or with the Snowtape community using via the Vivid Radio Community. I love the tagging features because it saves me from endlessly searching the lyrics to find the name of a certain song.

If Internet radio is essential to you, then Snowtape will also be essential.
